School Drive Partnerships

Collaborating with local partners to help your school community

Does your School Market need help communicating upcoming food drives throughout the community? There are a variety of local partners you may be able to work with to spread the word!

The Food Bank's partner agencies, community assistance organizations and student groups may be able to help drive donations. They can especially help to bring in especially high-need items, such as peanut butter and other proteins, hygiene products, cleaning supplies or whatever else your school community may need.

Working with other partners of The Food Bank

Like you, many of The Food Bank's partners are eager to share resources that will help improve food security in the community. Depending on availability, these partners may be able to share their own experience with food donations or even collaborate and spread the word for upcoming food drives.

Working with other local partners

Local charities and nonprofits can be a great resource for communicating your upcoming food drive, even if their focus is in another area! Look for local churches, optimist clubs, VFWs or other groups that regularly contribute to your community.

Consider using the Fundraising Flyer template to make a quick and easy marketing piece that showcases the items your School Market needs most. Or, use our Social Media templates to spread the word online!
